He was observed to pass out of a car after which he was not seen.

KINSHAN STREET FRUIT HOUSE. | an average, have decayed thus far in these escription of the Fruit Preserving House, Patent d by Prof. Benj. E.

Syce, of this City.-The Present Ninte of the Fruit.-General Result of the Experiment, &c. Late in October or early in November of Messrs, Nyce, Shirk & Co., on Kinsman street, while the proprietors were putting in their fruit. We at that timegave aquite full description of the house, and detailed ous fruits, apples, grapes, pears, &c., &c., which were put in. At the kind invitation of Prof. Nyce, we went through the establishment a day or two since, and we are prepared to report most favorably on the nanner in which the fruit has been kept. But before we speak particularly of this, we will lay before our readers some account this scientific process of preserving fruit is based, believing, as we do, that it is a mat- and study of the habits of the various ter of great curiosity and general interest, now that the institution may be considered

This house consists of two spartments, one above the other. The upper one conains ice, put in every winter, in depth sually five or six feet. This is separated from the fruit room below it by a floor of galvanized iron, the sheets of which are of two castings of sheet iron, three and a | with their all virtue in them. half feet apart. The edges of these sheets are painted and closely nailed to upright studding, the intervening space being filled with chaff, sawdust, or short shavings, or floor of the fruit room is also made of galvanised iron. Below this are placed shavings, three feet thick, on a coating of tar and pitch, spread one inch thick upon the ground to prevent the entrance of moisture. One or more wind-wheels are placed above formerly, in its dry state, the chlorids of the house. calcium, a substance which has great power of absorbing moisture; but now the waste bittern, from salt works (absolutely costless,) after being dried, is found to be equally as efficient as the former chloride. The elements of a complete preserving atmosphere are, coldness, dryness, purity, equality of temperature, at all times, and n every part, absence of light, and if possible, the exclusion of the great agent of desomposition, the oxygen of the air. This plan secures all these elements in great perfection. The thermometer shows a uniform temperature of 34° in all parts of the degree from 34°, even from April until October. Dryness is its leading patentable feature. out in tubes to the outside, once in about paus, of sheet iron, and returned to the house in the dried state as before. The same substance is thus used twenty or thirly times. The air in a room so complotely confined, after the fruit is chilled down to 310, becomes very still. The fans are used to give circulation to the air, and bring the moisture arising from the fruit, in contact with the absorbent, to be taken up by it, although it is found, on trial, that they are not at all indispensable.

The air is pure, because every source of impurity is excluded. In the gradual ripening of fruit, hydrogen and carbon are constantly given off; the former unites with the oxygen of the air, and forms water: the latter carbonic

This process in any confined vascel filled cially if the fruit be ripe, and the air warm, in about forty-sight hours. The rooms of this house are gas tight, and when filled with fruit, if closed up for two days, a candle goes out in them almost instantly. The fruit is then surrounded by an atnosphere composed of the nitrogen of the air and carbonic sold. The fermer is destitute of all active properties, good or bad. The latter is not sufficiently acid, unless under heavy pressure, to produce any action on fruits immersed in it. Hydrogen and carbon then cease to be evolved from the fruit on there is now no agent to unite with them, in the same way that they cease to be evolved from a burning cannelle, when the air is removed. Decomposition ceases in both cases, and for the same reason. The principle is thus stated by Liebig: Decay is much retarded in the absence of naisture, and by the substance being surrounded with an atmosphere of carbonic soid, which prevents the air from coming in contact with decaying matter." All fruit should be in the house when tree-ripe; that is, as soon as it has received all the virtue the tree or the vine can impart to it. Liebig says: "Rub an unripe, or green, apple or pear on a grater, to a pulp; wash this with cold water on a fine sievo-, the turbid liquid which passes through, deposits a fine flour of starch, of which not even a trace can be detected in the ripe fruit. This after-ripening, as it is called, is purely a chemical process. It is the starch being transformed into sugar; the more starch the unripe fruit contains, the sweeter does it become when rips."

Although, after the saccharine change, nutrefication may go on slowly at 34°, yet starch is much more slowly changed into sugar at that temperature. In strict accordance with this principle, it is found that the most tender fruits, if put in immediately when made, keep better than the more hardy sorts, if not put in till fully rips. One three bushels if put in in the proper season.

It is believed and claimed by the patentee and by all the scientific gentlemen who have examined the subject, that there are but two known modes, for practical use, of drying sir; and, as we have already stated, dryness is the leading patentable feature of this house, and the sine que non of preserving fruit in full health and flavor. One mode consists in throwing the air upon ice. or an ica-cold surface: the other, in forcing it upon absorbents. The principal experiments hitherto have concerned the former method, which is a very imperfect and unsatisfactory one. For by it the sirgives up only so much vapor as is in excess of its capacity at 32°. It is still as wet as it can be at this ice-cold temperature. The absorbents used in Nyce's fruit rooms condense vapor freely from the driest air, even when chilled down to zero, or below it. His fruit house, without ab sorbents, presents one of the best arrangements to dry air by the first method, as it presents the largest ice-cold surface on its upper part, the place to which the vapor from the fruit, always somewhat heated by the chemical change that produces it, immediately ascends. But experience has clearly shown in this house, that present results could not be reached by this method alone, and it would seem, and it is positive-Ohio Cavalry, has been recently made full by claimed, that the plan adopted in the Kinsman street fouit house is the only one ontly uniform and perfect and a constantly equable and adequate degree of coldness. But the people are impatient of the theories of the matter, and crave results. They wish to know, first of all, how the fruit has kept, in what condition it now is,

and if the experiment is a success, and if the institution "pays."

ms. And there is this peculiarity in the decay of the fruit. When a decayed apple is found, it is universally found totally decayed, and surrounded by fruit not at all tainted by its rot, proving that the defect was already in the apple at the time it was put into the house. The patentee is positive that, if an apple has a sound skin at last year, we visited the Fruit House of the time it is housed, he can preserve it in full health and flavor, by means of the agents, dryness and coldness, although it very rarely occurs that fruit, apparently sound, has an internal power of decay, over the modus operandi of preserving the vari- which science has as yet attained no control. But if an apple can be plucked from the tree at the time it has sucked all the virtue which it can draw therefrom, and has a sound skin, Prof. Nycs will put the same in his rooms, and successfully defy it to decay. And this is the great problem now to be solved, to wit: The determina tion of the precise time when fruit should of the building and the theory on which | be removed from the orchard to the preserving rooms. Long years of observation man's insight and intuition, so to speak,

The fixation of the flavor of the fruits, apples, grapes, &c., is wonderful, and seems to realize the tales of magic. Here we have tender varieties of fall apples, some of them other non-conducting substances. The long since out of the market, which are as ably occupy all the present day. The case fregrant, firm, crisp and juicy as ever, as if enchantment had been struck through them, as indeed it has been. Here are grapes, fresh, plump, the bloom on them yet, their stems still green, and they full of wine. Lemons, put in six or seven weeks the roof, geared to fans in the fruit rooms. | ago, are as fresh, and their stems as green, On the floor of the fruit room was spread as on the morning of their introduction into

The most remarkable thing connected with the rooms, is their absolute dryness. Not a particle of moisture is to be seen anywhere on the fruit or in the apartments .-Fruits rolled in the hand sound crisp and restle like the leaves in autumn. Apples which, in the bins are as dry as powder, float in their perspiration, in two minute time, if taken into the air. The dryness is positively absolute, and Prof. Nyce may well congratulate himself on achieving this long sought-for result. The atmosphere in the preserving rooms is chilled down to 310, and kept there in room, and is found not to vary a single | the warmest weather. Scientific gentlemen who are disposed to question this, if any such there may be here, are at liberty, and are specially invited, to investigate the Vapor is constantly given off from differ- matter for themselves Prof. N. has sucent kinds of fruit, amounting usually to at | cooded in producing a complete preserving least half gallon of water from one hundred atmosphere, by securing the presence of the bushels, per week. Nothing is now wanting to the perfection of this fruit preserving process, except a judgment infallible in discovering the exact proper time for the removal of the fruit from the tree to the rooms. Time will supply the elements of this knowledge.

MRS. WALLING'S LECTURE.-This true and leyal Southern woman will deliver a lecture this (Thursday) evening in Chapin's Hall, detailing her experience in Seceshdom, She resided in Texas during the first years of the rebellion, and, in common with the Union people of the South, suffered almost unheard-of persecution. When the conflict waxed fiercer than she could endure, she left home with a young brother and her three small children, and set out for the North star, little expecting ever to reach with fruit, consumes all the oxygen, espe- the Northern States. But a kind providence directed her steps, and she has been enabled to render valuable service to the Union cause. She canvassed Indiana during the fall campaign. She has lectured here and there, East and West, and comes to us highly recommended by Governors Brough, Oglesby, Morton, Ystes, and many distinguished men.

We clip from an exchange the following notice of this heroic lady: Mrs. Walling, we take pleasure in stating, is not like Wendell running, Anna Dickerson, and many others who, beforeour late President's death, denounced been a consistent supporter of his adminis-tration. During the late Presidential canwas she was an efficient and successful speaker. On the very night of the assessing singular was not the matter was pouring forth indescribable joy, Mrs. Walling described a beautiful lecture at Piqua, to a large and enthusiastic audience, and in which she remarked, "Our dear President, Christians of the control of were it possible since the time of Christ, the Savior of all nations, and of his apostles, for a man to be too good, the savior of the nation is the man. My belief is, that at the close of this bloody conflict, the bright-ness or brilliancy of his career will even leave Washington in the shade. Traiters mention a time when he did not bring a true heart equal to the stupendous task before him." We have not time enough to before him. de justice to this distinguished lady, this we do say, we cordially welcome. Texas cratress to our city.

Mrs. Walling's experience is rare, and she will furnish those who will visit Chapin's Hall, no ordinary treat. We hope our citizens will help and encourage this estimable lady and honor themselves by largely attending her lecture this evening.

A DANNING OUTRAGE .- A man, who is a stranger to all parties concerned, as well as to the police now on his track, went yesterday to a German living near the city, whose name we will not mention, and hired his daughter, a lass fifteen years of age, to do light work in his garden. As there was nothing out of the way in the transaction, bushel of apples if fully rips, throws off such affairs being customary among the more hydrogen, and forms more water, than | Germans, the parents of the girl allowed her to go, and thought nothing further of it, until the child came dragging berself home, half dead, several hours afterwards. This brute, instead of taking her to his garden, decoyed her along the Lake Shore Railroad, and when about three miles from the city, bore off into a piece of woods, and there ravished the child. He drew a large knife, with which he intimidated her, presenting it to her breast, and threatening to kill her if she offered any resistance, or made the matter known.

The girl was in an awful condition who she reached her home. The police were immediately notified of the case, and it is to be hoped that the villain will soon be caught and made to suffer as he deserves.
